Dr. Aubry works with a sedated wolverine. The wolverine will not be harmed and is released back into its environment after the scientists have recorded information about the animal.

A wildlife biologist studies terrestrial wildlife species (mammals, birds, reptiles, and amphibians) and the habitats they occupy to better understand their biology and habitat relationships.

Dr. Keith Aubry
Wildlife Biologist
Ph.D., University of Washington
USDA Forest Service scientist