

Natural Inquirer Wilderness Benefits Edition
Wilderness Makes Cents

Who or What Am I ?

1. I am a type of scientist that studies people. I study people both as individuals and when they are in groups. I am particularly interested in their actions and relationships. Who am I?

2. I am a type of wilderness benefit that people experience. I occur in three different forms. One example of me is the benefit of knowing that wilderness exists, even if a person never gets to visit wilderness areas. What am I?

3. There are numerous techniques that scientists use to collect data. I am a technique used by social scientists. I am made up of lists of questions that can help scientists learn about peoples' likes and dislikes. What am I?

4. From an economic perspective, assigning values to things like recreation use benefits can make them easier to understand. I am the amount a person would be willing to pay for something above what they are required to pay. What am I?

5. Many of the things people use to take care of their needs come from nature. I am a supply of these things. I come in many forms including oil, water, and forests. What am I?
